

How universities can improve [coursework] postgraduate students' transition to study

WORKSHOP

Professor Linda Crane
Bond University

The focus of this workshop is to expand the knowledge, skills and resources academics can use to address student transition particularly in the context of post-graduate students. The content and resources are developed from two Australian Government Office for Learning and Teaching strategic priority projects on graduate employability and postgraduate student experience. The workshop will summarise the projects' key findings relevant to postgraduate student experience of transition. Participants will engage in interactive activities to explore how postgraduate students perceive their student experience and strategies we can build into the everyday curriculum to support them.

Working together, the participants will:

- identify which of the student experiences are true in the ECU contexts – and add others identified through discussion
- share strategies that they currently use to support postgraduate students including those targeted to enhance students' transitions
- consider additional strategies to bolster student experience through transitions and for employability within the ECU context

The workshop will be of interest to Associate Deans Teaching and Learning, Postgraduate Course and Unit Coordinators and staff who support postgraduate coursework students and staff.
