

NATURAL JUSTICE / PROCEDURAL FAIRNESS

The following are generally considered to indicate natural justice or procedural fairness when dealing with a dispute

- The right to be fully informed of the complaint, including the name of the complainant
- The right to reply in full to the complaint
- The right to be considered innocent until proven guilty
- The right to be represented or supported by another person
- The right to have information about the complaint restricted to those who are directly involved
- The right to be given the benefit of any reasonable doubt
- The right to have all mention of the matter removed from personal records if the case is not upheld
- The right to be informed of any avenues of appeal